Training Course in Bereavement Support

Course Content:

The course covers key counselling skills and models of the process of grief and bereavement. It is taught in an experiential way in order to allow participants to develop the foundation of awareness, skills and knowledge they will need to begin work as bereavement support workers.

1. Professional Development:

The counselling approach used on the course is an integrative one which teaches counselling skills within the contexts of bereavement and loss. The course is suitable as a professional development course for professionals who work with bereaved people or for those working in a voluntary capacity with issues of grief and loss. The course was produced in association with Shetland College.

2. Entry Requirements

This course is intended for applicants who have already successfully completed a Certificate in Counselling Skills or equivalent.

The course is not usually suitable for anyone who has suffered a recent significant personal loss or bereavement.

Role play and simulated practice are used on this course and participants are expected to be prepared to address their own issues. It must, however, be emphasised that the course is a training group and not a therapy group.

3. Content and Time Commitment

The course will consist of one induction/introduction session followed by 6 training sessions, and focuses on the participants' own experience of loss as well as looking at psychological models and theories of the process of grieving and the experience of loss. The course aims to offer the opportunity to develop existing awareness, knowledge and counselling skills and to integrate these with the awareness, knowledge and skills required to engage in bereavement care.

Anyone who cannot attend the whole range of dates must wait until they can commit themselves to attending the entire course.

The dates below are provisional and may be changed to suit participants availability. Unplanned absence for unforeseen circumstances will be given individual consideration.

4. Volunteering with SBSS

Volunteering with SBSS is very rewarding and comes with a multitude of benefits.

SBSS offers a free and confidential one to one bereavement support service to adults and children living in Shetland. Support workers operate on a voluntary basis, giving their time freely to support clients. In response, SBSS will support all volunteers ensuring they have the relevant training, are not 'out of pocket' by covering travel and supervision costs, and offer further relevant training, CPD and peer support as required. A copy of our volunteer agreement is attached for information.

Please get in touch if you want to find out more.
